A Sense of History
by James G. Stahlman

Lord David Cecil, in his memorable story of the Cecils, Hatfield House, an English ruling family for more than 500 years, best describes my feeling about historical documents, pictures and hallowed memorabilia. He describes his own feelings in looking at family papers, documents, favorite portraits and books housed in the magnificent library at Hatfield House, with a degree of personal feeling as follows: "There is something strange and ghostly in looking at these papers, and still more in handling them. As nothing else does, they seem to put us in direct, almost physical touch with their long-dead authors. Portraits show them to us at second hand and through the eyes of the painter—and who knows if his eyes were to be trusted? But these sallow pages have been touched by their actual hands; they are creased where their fingers have folded them; those same fingers have traced the writings now faded to a faint brown, by which they uttered their thoughts and feelings at the very instant these passed through their minds; so that as we read we become for a moment their contemporaries and find ourselves existing in the drama of their lives while it is still in the process of happening."

Such papers, to me, hold a power to stir the sense of history. It is my earnest hope that these treasured documents, pictures and other memorabilia represented in this extensive collection will give all those who look upon them in the years to come a realization of our debt to so many who have added so much through the years since Ferdinand and Isabella, to America's achievements in every category of human endeavor, now become its permanent record.

Not all the personages represented in this collection deserve admiration or emulation. Some were oppressive tyrants, some genocidal murderers, some despotic enemies of Man's most precious, personal possession—liberty, the foundation stone of this great nation of ours, for which we have given so generously of our blood and substance that men everywhere, of every color, creed or origin, might live in peace and freedom.

So, when you look upon the contents of this collection, remember that the men and women, the good and not-so-good represented here in book, picture, autograph, document and other memorabilia, have justly or unjustly

Lord David Cecil, in his memorable story of the Cecils, Hatfield House, an English ruling family for more than 500 years, best describes my feeling about historical documents, pictures and hallowed memorabilia. He describes his own feelings in looking at family papers, documents, favorite portraits and books housed in the magnificent library at Hatfield House, with a degree of personal feeling as follows: "There is something strange and ghostly in looking at these papers, and still more in handling them. As nothing else does, they seem to put us in direct, almost physical touch with their long-dead authors. Such papers, to me, hold a power to stir the sense of history. It is my earnest hope that these treasured documents, pictures and other memorabilia represented in this extensive collection will give all those who look upon them in the years to come a realization of our debt to so many who have added so much through the years since Ferdinand and Isabella, to America’s achievements in every category of human endeavor, now become its permanent record.

Not all the personages represented in this collection deserve admiration or emulation. Some were oppressive tyrants, some genocidal murderers, some despotic enemies of Man’s most precious, personal possession—liberty, the foundation stone of this great nation of ours, for which we have given so generously of our blood and substance that men everywhere, of every color, creed or origin, might live in peace and freedom.

So, when you look upon the contents of this collection, remember that the men and women, the good and not-so-good represented here in book, picture, autograph, document and other memorabilia, have justly or unjustly played their respective roles in bequeathing a very unique legacy which this collection seeks to preserve for us and millions of yet-unborn beneficiaries of our national strength and glory.

Why shouldn't any man or woman love America, respect its flag, obey its laws, and serve it with devotion and sacrifice in peace or in war?

This is an inescapable obligation, especially if he or she were native-born, or sprung from men and women of foreign birth who sought the blessings of liberty and the protection of this nation's precious guarantees to every individual, embraced in our Constitution and its Bill of Rights.

I love America for all these reasons, and I take pride in the heritage which is mine through grandparents descended on the one side from Scottish kings and highland MacGregors and on the other by British colonial settlers and German Lutherans, all lovers of liberty and devout in their faith and trust in Almighty God, without whose abiding love and continued blessings, this Republic and its democratic processes would disappear from the face of the earth.

May all of us continuously strive to be worthy of at least an honorable footnote in these annals.
Foreword
by Reba Wilcoxson

Who has looked at the signature on a letter or memorandum and not speculated about the meaning of its size, the seeming boldness or timidity of the hand, the unexplainable flourishes of the pen?

Whether one subscribes to or denounces graphology, there is an irresistible attraction in how persons write their names. Who will not marvel at an indecipherable “Mussolini,” the apparent effects of age in a “Sincerely Yours, George Peabody,” or the clear “Langston Hughes” that is five inches across?

The James G. Stahlman Historical Collection affords more than 2,000 opportunities to indulge in such speculation. But it offers much more—the autographs are not only on cards, scraps of paper, photographs, drawings, or flyleaves of books, but also on official documents and personal letters that excite what Mr. Stahlman called “the sense of history.” In addition, there are a number of artifacts, such as the seal of Elizabeth I, a Mesopotamian signature seal, a pistol, and part of a battle flag. The late senior trustee and long-time benefactor of Vanderbilt initially gave the collection to the University in 1974; he continued to add to it until his death in 1976.

The autographs and memorabilia are kept in the Vanderbilt Archives in the Special Collections Department of the Library. Parts of the collection are exhibited on a rotating basis in a display case secured especially for the purpose. It was Mr. Stahlman’s wish that the collection be “made readily accessible to all persons visiting the Library, particularly including students, research historians and the University community at large.”

Some of the autographs came to Mr. Stahlman in the natural course of his affairs. As publisher of the Nashville Banner, as a president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association and of the Inter-American Press Association, and as a world traveler, he had occasion to meet and to correspond with many of his famous contemporaries.

For example, he corresponded with Admiral Richard Byrd and helped to get a supply of hickory for sled runners to be used in the Antarctic; to express his appreciation, the explorer named a craggy peak in Little America “Mount Stahlman.”

In an interview for the Vanderbilt Alumnus in 1974, Mr. Stahlman confessed that he had "always saved everything" but that he became a serious purchaser of historical documents as late as 1973. In New York he happened to see in a bookstore window a commission signed by President Theodore Roosevelt and then Secretary of War William Howard Taft. Acquiring that document led him to aspire to a complete set of signatures of the Presidents—and so he commissioned an agent to find them and began to receive catalogs of auctions and information about private holdings.

Dealers are bonded and provide a provenance of authenticity—including certification of autographs that would baffle a cryptographer. Sometimes, to get one signature that he especially wanted, Mr. Stahlman would have to buy a "lot" or package. This accounts, in part, for the wide range of persons represented in the collection: actors and actresses, artists, opera stars, scientists, explorers, writers, military heroes, outlaws, financiers, political leaders, labor leaders, figures in sports, royalty, aviators and astronauts, representatives of minorities important in American history—such as blacks and Indians—and even more categories.

Although Mr. Stahlman focused on American documents in his acquisitions, the autographs reflect an awareness that national history is ultimately global. Nor did he see it as a male world, for there are hundreds of signatures of women. Mr. Stahlman is reported to have said that the most expensive woman in his collection was Marie Antoinette.

The catalogue of autographs which follows testifies to the diversity of the collection. While the indexing by the Special Collections Department was under way, I had occasion to examine a number of specimens. Using arbitrary categories, I asked to see the oldest document, the most beautiful one, the "Presidents' Book," Civil War mementos, a famous couple, a black writer and a white one, a male and a female reformer, Hitler and Mussolini, and some persons "close to home," that is, associated with Tennessee history or with Vanderbilt.

The oldest document, signed by Ferdinand and Isabella, is written in a late fifteenth-century Spanish script. Since it had not been translated, I called on the Department of Spanish and Portuguese for assistance. I learned that translation is difficult because many of the marks are really abbreviations—a kind of fifteenth-century shorthand. Also this particular scribe had a writing style with unexplainable loops that are sometimes parts of letters and sometimes not. We determined that it has to do with Indians and towns but could not tell whether it is an official order or a report.

Why, I asked, is it not in Latin as is the document of Elizabeth I in the collection? And that called up a peculiarity of Spanish history. Because many of the most learned scribes in Spain were Jews, and the Jews saw Latin as the language of the Christian church, they influenced the use of Spanish in public documents. This had been true for almost 200 years before the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella. Mr. Stahlman would have been pleased at how, indeed, such papers light up the past.
The most beautiful document is a Spanish illuminated manuscript made up of 20 leaves, 11 of which are vellum. It was issued in 1775 by Charles III of Spain to Don Francisco Leandro de Viana, granting him the title of Conde de Tepa. This officer in the Spanish Army in Mexico was awarded the rank of Count for his service in the war of 1761 against England. There are five full-page watercolor paintings and six large illuminated capital letters. The colors are still bright and clear; the drawings are intricately detailed. The whole manuscript is handsomely bound in red morocco with gilt decoration. The art of illumination is said to have been a dying art by the sixteenth century; yet here is an example dated 1775. One is prompted down another trail of history.

Entitled Autographs of the Presidents of the United States—1979–1923, the "Presidents' Book," as it is called, is a bound collection of official papers and letters representing the Presidents from Washington through Franklin Delano Roosevelt; there are also 30 engraved portraits. Several of the earlier documents are countersigned by persons who have their own place in history: Timothy Pickering, Henry Clay, John C. Calhoun, Jefferson Davis.

George Washington's signature appears on the ship's papers for the Three Sisters, 338 tons, bound for the East Indies, under the command of John Cathcart. The authorization, dated January 8, 1796, is in English, French, and Dutch. Her cargo is listed as "Brandy, Beef, Butter, Candles, Duck, Fish, Flour, Glass, Herrings, Hats, Iron, Merchandize, Oil, Porter, Port, Rum, Salmon, Soap, Tallow, Wine." An entry on the back of the ship's orders, dated the following August, records that John Cathcart had died and "the command devolved to Joseph Dobel, first mate." The entry was made by the American Consul, "Isle of France." Here is what Henry James would call the "germ" of a story.

In other papers we see the Presidents appointing judges, surveyors, and other officials. We learn that Zachary Taylor, while still a first lieutenant in the Army in 1810, claimed a subsistence allowance of two rations a day (20¢ each), the total bill for five months being $61.20. President John Tyler in 1844 pardons Eli Kain, who had been convicted of counterfeiting coin and had served five years in prison. As one of the President's reasons for the pardon, he cites "the bad character of the witnesses against him." We read President John A. Garfield's mysterious note of November, 1880, to General Benham on the reported behavior of a gentleman to be "so strange that I forbear to make any comment upon it."

Some early Presidential papers contain printed portions, but mainly they are handwritten; if long or on official business, the text is written by clerks and signed by the President. The first typed letter in the Presidents' Book is signed by William McKinley, November 21, 1896; McKinley was inaugurated in 1897. With the typewriter apparently came an abandonment of the practice of adding to the particular date the words "and of the Independence of the United States of America, the one hundredth—or whichever anniversary it was.

In the back of the Presidents' Book Mr. Stahlman added letters of subsequent Presidents through Gerald Ford. Most are addressed to Mr. Stahlman personally. Signatures of President Jimmy Carter have been added recently.

Of the military figures in the collection, those of the Civil War are most extensive. There are signatures of 155 Union officers and 40 Confederate officers. One Civil War piece is notable more for its content than for its autograph. It is a letter from John Macdonald to his brother, written aboard the "U S Gun Boat Port Royal" on August 2, 1862. In a minute hand, but clearly legible with a magnifying glass, the letter includes an absorbing account of the sinking of John’s former ship by the Confederate iron-clad frigate, the Merrimac. The encounter seems to have occurred in the James River. John believes it was the first defeat of a Union ship by the Merrimac. Although no master of punctuation, John is a master reporter. The Merrimac and an anonymous sailor come alive as he tells us that ... instead of firing again she put on a full head of steam and run right into our side with her iron prow it made the old ship stagger during this time we were loading and firing in double quick time after she struck us it took her about 3 minutes to get it out again and during that time an incident took place worthy of notice one of our gun crew bent on getting his name up made an effort to seize her flag he jumped on to her but he slid right into the water as she had a coat of grease all over ½ an inch thick.

In subsequent shelling John is thrown to the deck, sees the dead all around him, and is amazed to find he has only a fractured jawbone and "2 of my best Tobacco chewers gone." As he ends the story of the sinking ship, he pays a compliment to the enemy: "There was one good point in the Merrimac and that was not to fire on us while hanging on the rigging."

General James Longstreet shows us the Civil War through a different prism. In several letters to Colonel Latrobe he seeks assistance in getting copies of papers that he had given to General Robert E. Lee long before. Writing in 1886—Lee had died in 1870—Longstreet mentions a letter he had written about naming his son, born October 20, 1863, after the commanding general. Lee's reply, Longstreet recalls, "was one of a few occasions of humor from the General. Our talks, and letters, were almost always of severe thought and study."

For my category of "famous couple," I selected the tragic royal figures, Maximilian and Carlotta, Emperor and Empress of Mexico for four troubled years, 1864 to 1867. Maximilian's signature is very wide, almost unreadable, and accentuated with bold underlining. It is affixed to an official document of December, 1864, six months after his coronation in the Cathedral of Mexico.
We find Carlotta writing in Italian to a cousin on February 5, 1865. Carlotta’s signature is different from the script of the letter—the secretary’s handwriting is so regular and beautiful that it almost looks as if it were set in type. The letter suggests that the cousin was in the church, for Carlotta addresses him as “Your Eminence” and asks him to pray for her and Maximilian so that heaven would continue “to protect our difficult undertaking.” Two months later U.S. Secretary of State William H. Seward ruled that the presence of French troops supporting Maximilian was a violation of the Monroe Doctrine and they must be withdrawn. Their “difficult undertaking” was doomed: Carlotta became mentally ill; Maximilian was executed after his forces were defeated by Juarez.

My writers turned out to be two Americans: Langston Hughes (1902-1967), the black poet associated with the Harlem Renaissance, and Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803-1882), Transcendental poet and essayist. Neither document is dated; both signatures are preceded by poetry. The Hughes piece, which is typed, is his translation of a poem, “When Snow Falls,” by Gabriela Mistral, a Chilean poetess who won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1945. She died in 1957; in that year Hughes published selected translations of her poems.

Emerson’s poem is in his own hand and is entitled “Letters”:

Every day brings a ship,
Every ship brings a word;
Well for those who have no fear,
Looking forward well-assured
That the word the vessel brings
Is the word they wish to hear.

The numerous autographs of persons in aviation and space exploration attest to Mr. Stahlman’s attraction to the history of flight. Mounted with an autographed photo of Lindbergh is a facsimile of the cancelled $25,000 prize check for his famous non-stop flight from New York to Paris. The Wright brothers, Zeppelin, Seversky, Rickenbacker, Earhart, and others are also represented. But I wanted to see what General William “Billy” Mitchell, who became a cause célèbre over the issue of developing American air power, might have said in 1925—the year he was court-martialed. The letter was written December 9, while the court was in session. It is a short but immediate view of a moment in history:

I just can’t tell about things for a few days—maybe the court will be closed at the end of this week and maybe it will last over to next week. Furthermore, I am not sure just what I will do after that, but I want to make the lecture tour if possible.

He had openly charged the War and Navy Departments with being incompetent and negligent of national defense. The military court found him guilty of making statements that prejudiced good order and military discipline and suspended him from the Army for five years. Nevertheless, his views for reform led to the creation of the Army Air Corps in 1926. He continued his advocacy of air power in books and speeches. Ten years after Billy Mitchell died, Congress voted him a special Medal of Honor.

Florence Nightingale (1820-1910) directed her fight for reform toward nursing practices and hospital care. Her interest in sanitation was lifelong and extensive, as the letter in the Stahlman Collection attests. At 74, she writes from an English address to a Mrs. Robertson wanting to know what “changes there have been for the better in the Cottage Sanitary Work as e.g. what cesspool privies have been converted into dry earth closets. And could we know how they succeed?”

The autographs of two dictators I selected, Mussolini and Hitler, stir the imagination more than the official papers on which they appear. Both signatures are indecipherable. Mussolini’s looks like a part of an electrocardiogram; except for the capital H, Hitler’s is not much better. In the year of Mussolini’s letter, 1923, the Fascist Party, by a new electoral law, had been guaranteed a two-thirds majority in the Italian Parliament.

In the one of two documents with Hitler’s autograph that I examined, there is an ornate heading, Im Namen des Reichs. It was signed at Berchtesgaden, August 15, 1935, a year after Hitler became master of Germany.

Of the persons “close to home” that I wanted to “meet,” I found two letters that piqued my curiosity: one by George Peabody and one by Cornelius Vanderbilt II.

The sign of age appears in the penmanship of the philanthropist George Peabody, out of whose Peabody Education Fund for southern states emerged George Peabody College for Teachers, now of Vanderbilt University. The letter in the Stahlman Collection was written in London in 1868, a year before his death. At the time he was in ill health, suffering from what his physician called “gouty bronchitis.” Mr. Peabody, who reportedly did little reading, writes a gracious thank-you note to Arthur Helps, who had transmitted a book presented by Queen Victoria and who had sent his own Life of Las Casas. Therein lies another direction of research, for Mr. Peabody says of the latter that its “subject has an abiding interest for every American. . . .”

The letter signed “Vanderbilt” with no first name is, from the date and address—January 25, 1895, Grand Central Station, New York—obviously that of Cornelius II, grandson of the Founder. He was then Chairman of the Board of the New York Central Railroad, but the letter reflects another interest: the Trustees of the Institute of Christian Philosophy were to meet in his office at 4 o’clock, February 1, on which occasion “a matter of importance will be acted upon.”

Thus it is that most of the papers in the Stahlman autograph collection give us only fleeting glimpses through small windows. But the moments and names call up larger vistas—as Mr. Stahlman hoped they would.
