TO

Dr. Hiram Albert Vance,

THROUGH WHOSE SINCERE EFFORTS THERE HAS BEEN INCULCATED A SPIRIT OF HEALTHY ENTHUSIASM FOR ALL THAT IS BEST IN OUR COLLEGE INTERESTS,

THIS VOLUME IS RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED.
Hiram Albert Vance.

Doctor Hiram Albert Vance was born at West Frankfort, Herkimer County, in the State of New York, and spent most of his earlier years upon a farm in that commonwealth. Such a wholesome beginning of life is a fortunate factor in many a man's career. In the case of Doctor Vance the early environment seemed to create an impulse and to give additional inspiration, rather than dampen his youthful aspirations. By dint of personal sacrifice he was enabled to pursue a preparatory course in the Troy Conference Academy, at Coulterney, Vermont, and in the fall of 1884 he entered upon the realization of one of his fondest dreams, when he became a Freshman in Hamilton College. During his first month in college he became a member of Tau Chapter of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity, and his scholarly attainments gained for him at the end of his college course admission to the honorary fraternity of Phi Beta Kappa. During his college course he won marked distinction as an English scholar by taking nearly every literary prize in his course. He was prize-speaker in his Freshman year; first-prize essayist in both Sophomore and Junior years; and was prize-debater and Clark-prize orator in Senior year.

He was graduated with the class of 1888, and after remaining a year at his Alma Mater, as an instructor in history, and assistant librarian, he accepted a call to his present chair in the University of Nashville. The scholarly instincts were yet unsatisfied, however, and in the spring of 1891 the young professor set his face toward the German Universities. By almost Herculean efforts he won his degree of Ph.D., cum laude, in four semesters at Jena, where he studied English and Germanic Philology under the renowned Professor Frederick Kluge. He returned to resume the work of his chair in the University at the end of this period; and in the fall of 1893 brought from his college home at Clinton, to be his life companion, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. O. Myrick, whose acquaintanceship had been formed during his college days, and which the succeeding years had deepened and strengthened into a union of that perfect type.

Doctor Vance is not only a scholar and a gifted teacher, but the personation of vigorous strenuous manhood, tempered by such genial, generous sympathy, that after fourteen years of delightful companionship, I scarcely know which charms more, the gentle nature or the vigorous mind. Certainly these two qualities have made him an invaluable and beloved friend to the student body, and he holds an enviable place in the broadening activities of the University life.

Ellery C. Huntington.
HE GARNET AND BLUE—no longer a dream in the mind of the fanciful, but a reality! Some exponent of the activities and aspirations, the records and reminiscences, yes, even the fun and foibles of the student life here in the University of Nashville, has for sometime been in contemplation. Many have doubted even the possibility of a college annual under the present conditions. To such we wish to say that this book is only a step in the direction of enlarged possibilities. We feel very distinctly the many points wherein our work could have been improved, yet we believe that the real worth of the first edition of the GARNET AND BLUE should not be lost sight of in the brilliant prospects for its future success.

Owing to the very late beginning of our work, our aim has necessarily become a modification of our ideal. Our ideal annual would be slightly more literary in character, paying special attention to original and suggestive humor. Still, we believe that there is developed between these covers enough of the humorous and satirical to impart a feeling of ease and freedom, and enough of the serious to remind us that soon we shall look back upon our college days—days of pleasure even though mingled with cares—as upon joy departed.

Our primary aim has been that of an artistic souvenir. We have endeavored to treat of each organization and interest of the college as its usefulness and merits demand. We have had in mind a souvenir for all. Knowing that the mere externals of a book determine, in a great measure, its value as a possession, and that such is especially true in the case of a college year-book, we have put full stress upon the importance of artistic design and neatness of form.

Just here we wish to extend our appreciation to those who have so kindly assisted in our work. We are indebted to Misses Johnston and Cartwright and to Mr. Bond for work other than that accredited to them in this volume. The suggestive etching on our cover design is furnished by Miss Emma Lester.

Care has been taken to sacrifice our own personal views wherever they seemed to conflict with the larger sentiment of the University. Yet even with this precaution the GARNET AND BLUE is more or less the expression of individual ideas, and until its support comes to be more general, until it comes to be looked upon as a moving factor in the progress of the institution, the expression to the world of the inner life of the institution, until this is the case it can express nothing beyond the individual ideas of its editors.

Senior Editorial.

As members of the Class of 1902, we have that feeling of sadness that must come to every graduating class as the time draws nigh for bidding farewell to the dear old college. We have been associated together in the class rooms for the four years past; we have met in friendly rivalry in society halls; we have shared victory and defeat in athletics; we have enjoyed intimate companionship one with the other. We have learned to love our college as every one loves his Alma Mater; we love it as a whole, we love every part of it; we love the chapel, where we have sat together for so many mornings; we love the class room, where we have many times shamefully "busted;" we love the laboratories, the gymnasium, and we love every work in the library; we love even the campus fence, so often defaced by Vanderbilt's nocturnal smears of black and yellow. Then it is but natural that we should feel sad when we come to realize that within a few weeks we shall be breaking away from the associations of our college life—shall be saying farewell to our friends, and leaving behind us all that we have loved here for the four years past.

But we should not bewail the ending of our college career. Our four years here have been a preparation for the more serious duties of life. We go forth now with increased knowledge, with sharpened intellects, with studious and painstaking habits, and with our souls awakened and quickened into a higher life, to do the work that falls to our lot. Whatever that work may be, let us do it well; and by doing it well we shall reflect credit upon ourselves and upon our Alma Mater.

To the classes that remain behind we would say that we almost envy you your remaining years in college, for we believe it to be a great privilege to share and rejoice in the new life that is evidently coming to the old college. There are unmistakable signs of an awakening, and we shall watch with interest every step of progress that results from this awakening; and especially shall we watch the part that you take in this new life, for upon you in a large measure the success of many of the new movements will depend. We shall be with you in spirit in the years to come as you stand lustily cheering our gridiron heroes on to victory over our enemies of old. We shall rejoice with you in every victory in athletics and in all your victories in oratory, and suffer all your defeats with you just as we have done in the past.

PRETTY Senior girl—
Heart in a whirl!
Handsome Senior boy—
Heart full of joy!

If you ask the reason why,
To you I'll make reply—
Side by side
For four years.
Sharing joys
And sharing fears,
They had learned their lesson well;
Better far than I can tell.

“Knowledge is not power,”
They reasoned hour by hour.
“Love is the law of life,”
The guiding star through strife.

Happy Senior boy—
Heart full of joy!
Pretty Senior girl—
Heart in a whirl!
YOU RECOGNIZE him at first glance—the Junior man! He is as distinct from his fellow mortals as is the Senior distinct from the Freshman! He is as the man who has passed through fire, and comes forth unscathed. He is not voluble—volubility is the mark of the unlearned, the Freshman; he does not try to impress you with the wonderful amount of knowledge he has acquired—that is a weakness of the Sophomore; neither is he serious. Having passed through the stage of wonder and revelation; having passed through the stage of "dig and grind"—passed through both with credit to himself—he has acquired the ability of getting the greatest amount of good with the least amount of labor. He is well versed in the art of "cutting" classes—knows whose class he can "cut," how many times he can "cut," and when he can "cut." He has tasted the sweets and bitters of college life, and carries himself with that nonchalant air that makes him a veritable god in the eyes of the underclassman; in the eyes of the Senior, a sad reminder of days gone by.

The Junior man is the well-dressed man! "Consider the lilies of the field; they toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." He wears nose glasses and checked trousers with a grace that would strike terror to the heart of a dude and fill the heart of a society man with joy. He is not a dude, but he does aspire to the society man! He is an all-round athlete, is the Junior! Plays ball, plays tennis—yes, even plays with the heart of a susceptible lass! She is usually a Sophomore lass; she might be a Freshman. He will send her flowers, occasionally candy; and may even take her to the theater! Out of the goodness of his heart he wishes her to taste the bliss of a Junior escort. He comes home after the evening with her with a feeling akin to that of a martyr. He has reflected credit on himself, and he thinks his mother would be proud of him.

To the Junior girl he does not send flowers and candy. The Junior girl is the one girl who understands him. She knows his weakness, knows his strength; has heard him "bust" and has heard him distinguish himself. Between the Junior man and the Junior girl there is a wholesome affection, a spirit of comradeship, and a feeling of fellowship that does not exist outside the Junior year. He does not pay assiduous attention to her, but he will fight her battles, stand by her in the face of all opposition, and cares as much for her in her gingham shirt-waist as he does for another girl in a Sunday toilet! Indeed, under the happy, easy, care-free exterior there is a purity of heart, a nobleness of character, and a strength of purpose that bid fair to make, in the year to come, an ideal Senior of this our Junior man!

THE CLASS OF '04 is a large one both in numbers and importance. We wish to say that we passed through our Freshman year with credit to ourselves and much honor to the college. We are sorry to say, however, that the same cannot be said of the present Freshman Class. As to our importance, we think it best to testify ourselves, for we believe in the principle that everybody should blow his own horn. Acting on this principle, we may say, firstly, we have always taken a prominent part in encouraging and advising the Faculty, without which they would have made many serious mistakes. Secondly, we have kept up the numerous student enterprises. We began this noble work as soon as electric lights had ceased to be a novelty and oleomargarine a luxury. Thirdly, we have always given loyal support to athletics, and we boast of having representatives on all the college teams, and of having won the class banner in the inter-class track meet. Space and not modesty, let it be distinctly understood, forbids mention of the many other wonderful things we have done since becoming Sophomores.

Judging from what we have accomplished as Freshmen and Sophomores, it is safe to predict great things of us in our Junior and Senior years. As Juniors we will take more interest in college affairs, and we will have more class spirit and college patriotism than the present Junior Class. In all inter-class contests we propose to make as much noise as our opponents, and we will take great pleasure in banqueting ourselves frequently. We declare the establishing and fostering of Quid Nunc Clubs to be our future policy, and to be successful in this we will rent the gymnasium and invite those in authority opposed to our policy to all exercises free of charge.

As Seniors we propose to be dignified. We will go about all day long looking sober, serious, solemn, and above all—unlike the present Senior Class—intelligent. We are not going to be as modest as they, either. We mean to wear caps and gowns all the year, and we will not speak to an underclassman unless he approach us with fear and trembling. When we finally graduate and pass out into the world—which needs us so badly, but which is so small—it is confidently thought by the whole class that needy mankind will be very greatly benefited.

FRESHMAN EDITORIAL.

The Freshman Class has been doing its best to bring honor to itself and credit to the institution this year, and now at the close of the session we feel that our labors have not been in vain; for one of our number was selected to represent our college in the State oratorical contest, and we also have the champion checker player of the university.

Our class was organized early in the session by the election of a president and other officers. In the election of a president we exercised a good deal of care and forethought. Physical make-up counted seventy-five per cent in a candidate's favor, and age the remaining twenty-five per cent. As looks and general appearance were not considered, one of the two candidates was easily elected after considerable wrangling.

We are thinking of having several changes made in the course of study. For instance, basket ball for Caesar and Quid Nunc for English. The members of the Faculty have all done good work this session, and we have decided to let them hold their positions for another year. It is our intention to put a catapult and a battering ram in room 4 to keep the mice from disturbing the recitations, as we think this is the best way to give them some idea of the Empire and Greek-Old Roman culture.

There are several features about the city which we do not admire. In the first place, we can't understand why it is that everybody we meet is going in an opposite direction. It seems that they are trying to give us the hint that we are going the wrong way. Again, it seems that trusts have a stronghold here; for a certain Mr. Push owns nearly all the business houses in town, and a doctor by the name of Ugs has control of all the apothecary shops.

We had thought of joining the Sophomore Class next year, but after hearing from our last examination a majority of our number, on account of their great loyalty, have decided to stay with the Freshman Class another year. Some seem to think that we are too sentimental in this matter, but we believe it is the direct result of a strong class spirit.

At the beginning of the session there was considerable whining and crying about going home, but since the establishment of the nursery by one of the professors there has been less trouble. We feel very grateful to this good, kind man, and will give him something pretty when we get big. We like to sit on his knee and twirl his lonely moustache until he gets to nodding, and then search his pockets for pennies.

P. S.—There is also a Senior and a Junior Class in our college.

Peabody Poem

By Helen Johnston

Pansies, gentle pansies,
Beside my garden wall—
Pansy purple, pansy gold—
What mem'ries you recall!

Pansies are for thoughts, they say.
On wings of thought you've borne my soul away.

Back to the days of girlhood,
To the dear, old Peabody Hall.
Back to the weavers of purple and gold—
Loyal comrades, all.

Have they fulfilled their pledge,
Pansy,
As they passed through the years of Life?

Was theirs the preparation
That armed them for the strife?

Heeded they the motto,
"Neglect not the gift that is in thee?"

Ah, I've guessed your answer,
Pansy,
Golden pansy, nodding to me.

They, too, think often, Pansy,
Of each noble girl of old;
For a tiny god of love, Pansy,
Chained their hearts in purple and gold.

Organization of the Alpha Phi Society.

RECOGNIZING the advantages of organization for mental and moral development and the fostering of college fellowship, seven young ladies met in 1895 and organized this society, adopted a constitution, and elected the usual officers. The motto selected is "Powers of Truth," the colors white and heliotrope, and the flower is white carnation. The exercises for the regular meetings consist of essays, readings, debates, questions on parliamentary law, criticisms, queries, and music. The meetings of this society have been regularly maintained with ever-increasing interest and numbers. The aim has been to give more latitude to general reading, while providing special topics for study and presentation at stated periods. The criticisms are always kindly in spirit, but keen and suggestive, with the view of improving the style and correcting the subject matter. Music forms a pleasing diversion from the weightier subjects, while socials and receptions give opportunity for the entertainment of honorary members in a pleasant manner, and for developing the social graces.

Athletics.

FOR SOME YEARS PAST there has been a steady growth in the importance of athletics in our college, and we believe that no year has shown a greater development or has offered a brighter prospect for the future than the year that is just coming to a close. In this one year athletics has developed from a fit of enthusiasm over football during the first part of the year and a very weak manifestation of interest in baseball in the spring to a genuine and uninterrupted interest, lasting from October to June. Heretofore, after the stormy season of football there has been a dead calm in the interest in athletics, but this year the interest that found expression in football was turned, with the closing of the football season, into other channels, and as a result we had through the winter many exciting games of basketball, and are now enjoying, as we have never enjoyed before, the excellent sports, baseball and tennis.

How to foster and promote this spirit of all-the-year-round athletics is a problem that falls to the student body for solution. The problem has been one of means, but because the means are not readily at hand is no reason why we should despair of having a sustained interest in athletics. The experience of this year, in fact, shows that in spite of difficulties we can engage successfully in all the popular college games. The inadequacy of our gymnasium did not prevent us from having an interesting season of basketball; the failure of the Athletic Association to support baseball has not kept us from organizing and maintaining a strong team; the meager equipment for track athletics has not daunted us in the training of men for the annual field meet of the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association. The financial support given to athletics has come, except in the case of football, as voluntary contributions from the students. We believe that the students should support athletics financially as well as otherwise, but we believe that this support should be placed upon a firmer basis than voluntary contributions, so that it will always be adequate and certain. How shall it be done?

To speak in detail of the work done by our several athletic teams would require more space than we can here give to the subject; but we desire to call the attention of our readers to the records found on succeeding pages. A glance at the record made by our football team will show that ours was second to no team in the South. The records made by our track team and baseball team, when we remember that for some years past we have had practically no track athletics and no baseball, are records of which we may reasonably be proud.

The Peabody Dining Club was organized November 1, 1901, by Guy H. Norris, for whom its home was named. The organization being democratic in character, all benefits and expenses are shared equally by the members. As an indication of the possibilities for a larger freedom through concerted action on the part of the students, nothing furnishes a better example than the success of Norris Hall. The officers of the Club for the term are as follows:

J. W. Mosley, President.
H. B. Messick, Vice President.
Byron Norrell, Secretary.
A. R. Jones, Censor.
G. H. Norris, Treasurer and Manager.
Application of Means to End.

EARLY ONE AFTERNOON in the month of April, a Senior set out alone for a stroll into the country. As the air was balmy and the birds were tunefully inclined, our candidate (for a diploma) felt a thrill of inspiration in his very soul. Only two weeks before he had met his best girl (a Freshman from Arkansas), and she, of course, was food for thought. Her last words of the night before were still darting about in his mind like "sparks in burnt-up paper," and her picture, which she had given him with the request that he always wear it nearest his heart, was in his hip-pocket—he had left his coat behind for the sake of comfort. The day, the birds, the girl, and the knowledge of the fact that he was a Senior, all conspired to make him happy.

He soon found himself in the "deep-tangled wildwood" two miles from town, and began to think of retracing his steps; but just at this moment it seemed that the birds were warbling their sweetest notes, and the flowers, stirred by the breezes, were beckoning him on. He felt that he was afloat upon a sea of beauty, which was slowly and gently drifting him from a world of care and toil into the new and more enjoyable life of the social whole, and that all nature had come out to meet him at the threshold and usher him in. As he walked along the violets seemed to him to raise their heads and stand on tiptoe in order to catch a glimpse of his person—this dignified Man of the Gown.

The enchanting influence suddenly dying away, our friend awoke out of his reverie and noticed that he had come to the edge of a clearing in which there was a small house and field. Being very thirsty, he started down to the house to get a drink of water and rest awhile, which procedure he conjectured would afford him an opportunity for studying human nature. He had not gone far when he saw standing right in his path a well-developed specimen of the canine family, sporting a full set of grown-up teeth. To his "Hello, pup!" the dog uttered a low growl which somewhat dismayed the college man, but he braced up and said: "Sport, old boy, how are you?" A louder growl. "Now, that dog reminds me of a mutton-headed Soph.," mumbled our friend. He was afraid to retreat, advance, or move to either side; so he was compelled to stand still and think on his feet, as there was no hole into which he could crawl, and he did not know "straight up."

A kind of creeping, clammy feeling started at his ankles and spread rapidly over his whole body. He felt that something awful was about to happen. He thought how pleasant it would be to be the dog just at this moment, or even one of the Freshmen back on the ball ground. Like Hamlet, he wished to evaporate, but his flesh was too solid. He was a stern reality; so was the dog. He began to examine his mental content. How worthless was all his knowledge of the Renaissance! The flowers and bugs about which he knew so much seemed now to mock him. His knowledge of surveying enabled him to see that the distance between him and the dog was growing less, and that the dog would soon level his instrument and clamp his (the Senior's) lower limb. Psychology said the dog couldn't reason. Analytics? Yes, Analytics would save him. Just at this juncture the dog sprang forward, but our friend jumped aside and began to write the equation of a straight line as fast as possible. The dog was soon so close that the college man decided to try the next chapter, and immediately began to describe a most beautiful parabola, but the dog raised his \textit{latum rectum} and darted straight for the \textit{vertex}, which convinced our friend that he had better not approach the axis of \textit{X}. Ellipses were always attractive to him, so he began to describe several around an elm, with the dog in hot pursuit. On the fifth round he looked back and saw with horror that the dog was dangerously near his darling's picture. In the sixth the dog caught up. Then there was a \textit{torn-ado} in Arkansas.

A few seconds later the dog, with a quarter of a yard of cloth in his teeth, was on one side of the path and our friend was standing on the other. One could see that their experiences fitted into each other. "Higher mathematics is a doggoned failure," groaned he.

"Good evening, Mister," said a sweet voice. Whereupon our friend dropped down hastily upon the grass.

"Good evening, Madam," said he to the girl coming down the path.

"Mister, will that dog bite?"

"I think so, Madam."

"What is that in his teeth?"

"Madam, anybody would know that it is a piece of cloth. Please don't ask me any more questions."

"Oh, I wish I had it to put in my new crazy quilt. Won't you come down to the house and get a drink of water, and—and sit with us awhile?"

"No'm, I'm not thirsty, thank you; and from early childhood I have enjoyed sitting upon the grass. There is something comforting about it."

The girl passed on, and our friend returned through the woods to town, arriving too late for supper at the Dining Club. It is still a mystery to some why this Senior persisted in wearing his cap and gown before the time prescribed by the Faculty.

WILLARD F. BOND, '02.
Why Our Campus Is Yellow in Spring.

SOFT skies and warm South wind
Warned the Elfin-kind
That on the early morrow morn
Wild flowers of every kind our campus must adorn.

Aroused, each drowsy fay
Wakened with dismay
To find the time so close at hand,
With not a leaflet ready, nor a flower planned.

Such haste the fairies made
Where, in deepest shade
Hidden, their last year's paint pots lay.
Just where they'd left them on the last bright autumn day.

Round eyes peeped o'er the brim
Of each paint pot's rim,
And saw no purple, pink, or blue—
Only the yellow that last fall had made the maples' hue.

Too late now to prepare
Varied colors fair,
The fairies wisely plan to bring
Left-over autumn glory to the help of spring.

Next morn a golden sheen
O'erspread the clover green,
That ever since, to students here,
Has made remembrance of our springtime campus dear.

ELISEBETH BAKER, '03.
"LITTLE BOY BLUE."

"Little Boy Blue,"
Where did you grow?
Your ways are so inviting.
Before you came
Things were quite tame,
But now they're really exciting.

"Little Boy Blue,"
We look askance at you—
Your manners are so unusual.
To lectures you'll take us,
And calls you will make us,
And ne'er be rebuffed by refusal.

"Little Boy Blue,"
You are not true—
Indeed, we're afraid you are fickle.
When notes we compared
And experience "aired"—
Alas, alas, what a "pickle!"

"Little Boy Blue,"
Your eyes are "goo-goo,"
And you're an ideal knight-errant.
But co-education
Does not mean flirtation—
You're out of your sphere, it's apparent.

A Junior Yarn.

When the announcement was made to the college world that the Juniors were going into Camp for the summer, it was not surprised. It had ceased to express surprise at anything the Juniors did. In fact, if it had been asked to characterize the Junior class in a word, it would have said the "unusual"—unusual in ability, unusual in rapidity, unusual in stability; in short, "unusual." It never guessed how many sleepless nights, how many days of toil lay behind the simple announcement; how many meetings called, how many motions tabled. In all secrecy, had the plans been discussed—and not for the world would a Junior have told that, recorded on the minutes of the secretary, was the fact that one of their number had so far forgotten his dignity as to rise at a meeting and say, "The whole scheme's a mess; it makes Me-sick!" And that another, equally wrought up, jumping to his feet, had cried: "For Mercy sakes, Messick, sit down! Don't get 'Huffy,' and let's hear no Moore from you!" But all things came right in the end. Cosmos grew out of chaos, and preparations were carried forth in a manner that far surpassed the highest expectations of those who had set their Hart-on the scheme.

It was fully decided that every member of the class should go. There was only one person about whom the least doubt was expressed. That was Montagne Ross. Since little Charlie Ross had wandered away, gotten kidnapped—or what not—it was a well-known fact that the Ross family had a propensity for getting lost. True, such an accident had not befallen Montague; for the Board of Trustees, taking cognizance of the "Blank" expression of his face, and not questioning "what's in a name?" saw fit, shortly after his arrival, to erect a Wall around the campus, and he had seldom wandered beyond its boundaries. However, Richard and Richard's son offered to look after him. So, feeling his safety secured, the class hesitated no longer about taking him.

Accordingly, May the first found the entire body assembled on the "banks of the Cumberland," impatiently awaiting the boat that was to bear them away to their destination. What contrasts they presented! Some armed with Browning for the wounds of the soul; others with "Gray's Ointment" and "Brown's Iron Bitters" for the Hurt of the body!
Baggage and Bagley at their feet, and the whole atmosphere was one of joyful anticipation! Eagerly lent wings to time, and, unable to restrain impatience longer, they "asked Snell" what time his boat was due. Pulling out his Elgin, with that calmness so characteristic of the Snells, he slowly said: "Wy-att 7:30." "O Wind'er, Wind'er, Wind'er, man; you're away behind the times!" they cried. And just as he was about to make reply the boat appeared around the bend, thereby putting an end to all controversy.

The delay had been caused by a Baker, to whom, for a long time, the captain had been Owen back salary. Ably supported in her cause by old Harri's son, the pilot, who declared that her cooking was the best he had ever seen, she had refused to continue the trip after the arrival of the boat at the wharf. At length, yielding to the demands of the captain, paid the Baker, and all augured to go "happy as a marriage bell" until, shortly after, the Juniors were taken aboard.

With the cry of "Let her go, Gallagh!" they had pulled in the gang-plank, and settled themselves for a few hours of delightful riding. But Fate had decreed otherwise. Again she showed her displeasure, and again by means of that unfortunate Baker! This was surely the child of an unlucky star! In some mysterious manner she fell overboard just as the middle of the river was reached, and the Junior Mc's, true to the valorous Scotch blood which flowed in their veins, quickly plunged in to save her. Cheers rent the air as the tallest Mc., thrusting his hand to the bottom of the river, picked up the drowning Baker, and walked triumphantly back to the boat with her. "Ahh!" said one, amazed, striking the attitude of the famous actor Barrett, and repeating Milton's lines, "the tallest pine of the Norwegian elms was but a wondr within his hand." The current was too strong for the other Mc's, and, weighted down with the cares of their Junior year, they sank beneath the waves. Here must I say the loss to the Junior Class is an irreparable one.

Miss McChesney in her days had been an expert authority on West Virginia School Laws. McKay had been absolute authority on the management of the Peabody Record. He had desired to spend the summer at the camp in order that he might work upon his two books, which for some time he had contemplated bringing out. The first, entitled "A New Method of Dunning Delinquent Subscribers," promised to be rich in personal experience; while the second, the title of which had not been chosen, aimed to show that Alphonso Rinaldo Jones is a truer poet than was Thomson; that, as he is introducing entirely new elements into the lyrics of this age, he should occupy the same place in the literature of the twentieth century as was occupied by Wyatt in that of the eighteenth century; that, in so far as he is endeavoring to break the bonds of conventionality by changing all established laws of versification, his name deserves a place in the list of great reformers, even beside that of Latimer; and last, that he holds a place in the heart of the Junior far dearer than that which was held by sweet singers in the heart of the Castle-man of old.
It was, however, with a strong determination to put aside sorrow and disappointment, that the Juniors set foot on land again.

The walk from the landing to the camp was uneventful, but thoroughly enjoyable. They would Alford the shallow streams crossing the roadway and laugh with delight. That is, all except one dainty Miss who would Stanley her books on the ground and look pleadingly around until some strong arm lifted her across. The strong arm, however, grew tired of the lifting after a while, and its owner exclaimed when the third stream was reached: "Great goodness! It's a pity we didn't bring a wagon and Cart-er across!" But when the dainty blonde explained that "the doctor" had said that she must not get her feet wet, the owner of the strong arm made an abject apology. To the Junior mind there was but one doctor in all the world, and they followed his advice without question. At a class-meeting when he, of the opinion that enough energy had been expended, gave the word to adjourn, the whole class—even though some member, with the combined eloquence of both the Pitts, was on the floor setting forth the necessity of the revision of Roberts' "Rules of Order"—the whole class arose and fled as if fleeing from a pestilence. So, instead of a task, the lifting became a pleasure to the strong arm!

It was with a sense of gratitude that they came in view of the Junior Camp! One of the members whose family had gone to Cooke County, gladly offered his-holm to the campers when he had first heard the plans discussed. It was an old-fashioned house set back in a veritable English Park, its whiteness forming a beautiful contrast against the surrounding Greene—Greene in all its various shades and Hughes. On seeing it, there was no burst of admiration, but instead a reverend silence! Only one person was heard to utter a word—a poetical youth who, freed from all restraint, caressing the petals of the roses, said: "We can actually Cull-om; actually Cull-om!"

And it was to this place they had come; come to live the life Mitchell so beautifully tells us that Hawthorne lived at Brook Farm. Some to spend hours lying on the moss-covered bank of some clear stream deep in the Wood-fin fishing, believing that if they would Good-win from nature, they must be alone with nature. Others to work and study. To wrestle with debates and topics for the ensuing year. To prove theories no less intricate and no more explainable than "Holland's-worth was materially increased by the Burrus system introduced into England by the House of Stewart."

Brook Farm had been a failure. The Junior Camp will not be a failure, for in the whole vocabulary of the Junior Class there is no such word as fail.
